The quarantine bill passed the house. Its most carnest supporters believed it did not go far enough, and while they acquiesced in some of the amendments made by some of the New York members they did so under protest, and the belief that if they did otherwise the measure would meet a lingering death through filibustering.

The bill now goes to the senate, as it differs in many points from the bill which the senate has many points from the bill which the senate has passed.

The bill requires all vessels clearing for the United States to obtain from the consul or vice consul at the port of departure a bill of health. The president is authorized to detail a medical officer to serve in the office of consulate at any foreign port for the purpose of furnishing information and giving bills of health. The Marine hospital service shall co-operate with the state and municipal boards of health. The marine and municipal boards of health in the enforcement of the rules of such boards and the regulations prescribed by the secretary of the treasury to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries and from one state into another, but nothing shall be construed to warrant a federal official from relaxing state rules. On the arrival of an affected vessel at any port not provided with the proper facilities for treatment, the secretary of the treasury may remand the vessel to the nearest national or other quarantine.

Favored by an unexpected opportunity Sena tor Platt secured consideration of the Cherokee strip bill by the senate. Senator Platt moved to substitute for the house bill the Dawes bill as amended. After a long debate, covering the Cherokee intruder question and other perti-nent matters, the bill went over for considera-

There was but little business done in either house on the day that the death of Justice Lamar was officially announced.

Senator Sawyer, from the committee on pensions, reported a bill authorizing the commissioner of pensions to accept as proof of citizenship of an applicant for a pension under the act of July 27, 1890, the fact that at the date of his application he was an actual and bona fide resident of the United States, and it passed.

In the house filibustering against the bankruptcy bill was inaugurated by Mr. Kilgore, of Texas. In the first place he insisted upon the reading of the minutes in full. Then he objected to an approval of the document, and an hour was consumed before it was finally agreed to as a portion of the records of the house. Mr. Pierce aided Mr. Kilgore's every filibustering motion with another which was calculated to prevent action.

"Another wasted day" was the comment of republicans and their comments were re-echoed by the majority of the democrats. But a few of the democrats, opposed to the bankruptcy measure, held firm and the house adjourned without action, thus exhausting the two days assigned to the judiciary committee and the bankruptcy bill.

Senator Mills made a speech against the anti-cptions bill, as being aimed against the exist-ence of state governments. He thought the reence of state governments. He thought the republican statesmen were mistaken in regard to the state's right's sentiment of the people. The people of the United States loved their state government. They clung to it with an instance which told them that their liberties depended upon its preservation. By an India rubber system of construction, congress had the right to regulate the commerce in states. As proposed in the pending measure it could go farther and regulate the production of specified articles.
Passing from the constitutional argument he declared he would not support the bill, because it was not a regulation of commerce and beit was not a regulation of commerce and be-cause it could not affect the price on cotton, wheat, corn or other agricultural product. Fu-ture sales, he declared, were part of the busi-ness system of the country. Contracts for the supply of corn had to be made even before the corn was planted or the land ploughed. Every one would admit that the system of future sales was absolutely necessary and essential to the was absolutely necessary and essential to the was absolutely necessary and essential to the facility of commercial transaction.

Senator Hiscock also opposed the bill. He believed all legislation like that proposed was vicious, and he believed that if the bill was crystalized into a law it would become a basis of the most gigantic trust that ever existed in the United States.

An effort to pass a bill creating a committee on the alcoholic liquor traffic gave Senator Vest an opportunity of ventilating his views on such specimens of "crank legislation." and on these "pseudo-philanthropists who want to use the powers of congress to advance some hobby to which they are devoting their otherwise useless lives."

which they are devoting their otherwise useless lives."

The house considered the sundry civil appropriation bill. Mr. Davis, of Kansas, moved to increase the appropriation for the enlargement of military posts from $200,000 to $5.0,000. In opposing the amendment Mr. Dockery criticised the recent report of the secretary of the treasury in regard to the financial situation.

There was a persistent fight under the lead of Mr. Holman, against yereasing the item for the survey of public lands.

The house passed the bill granting right of way to the Oklahoma Midland railroad. Its passage had been obstructed at a previous session by Mr. Simpson, of Kansas; but upon this occasion he announced that he had no objection.

When the tidings of the death of Mr. Blaine reached the senate, Senator Hale rose and said, when the tidings of the death of Mr. Blaine reached the senate, Senator Hale rose and said, in part:

"Mr. President: A very great man has passed from this earth. Hon. James G. Blaine died in this city at 11 o'clock this morning. His long illness in some measure prepared us for that; but the dreaded event will carry sadness and mourning throughout the United States, and will awaken interest and sorrow wherever civilized man lives. Mr. Blaine's career was so remarkable and his public services so great, that in all the histories which are written of him he will stand the central figure not only as to his own country, but on the policies and subjects that have affected the other great nations. He belonged not to any one state, but to the whole country, and none could mourn more today for his loss than do the dwellers on the shores of the great gulf and in the cabins of the far Sierras.'

Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, then moved the senate adjourn, and the motion was adopted. The adjurnment makes the sixth interruption.

Scnator Cockrell, of Missouri, then moved the senate adjourn, and the motion was adopted. The adjournment makes the sixth interruption caused by death within the last few weeks.

The army bill has been reported to the senate; being the first general appropriation bill to reach the senate this session.

The senate held an extended executive session, and although it was only informally considered a long debate was had on the news from Honolulu. Generally the speeches seemed to favor annexation or establishment of a protectorate.

In the house of representatives there was a strong feeling environment. In the house of representatives there was a strong feeling expressed by leading democrats against annexation. At the same time there was an equally unanimous opinion that no other nation should be permitted to step in and control the destinies of the island. The Monroe doctrine was again upheld as a cardinal principle in our foreign policy and as demanding the exclusion of European domination over territory so near our own.

"What could we do with it and what a lot of trouble its affairs would give us" is perhaps a fair summary of the statements made informally by members. It is said at the same time that the course Hawaii is adopting in seeking ennexation is practically the same as that taken by Tezas when it became a part of the United States.

The house committee on rules presented a resolution for the investigation of the whisky trust by the judiciary committee and Panama scandal by a select committee of five members, which is also charged with an inquiry into the contract between the Pacific Mail Steamship company and the trans-continental railways. Both resolutions were at once adopted.

An Expert's Opinion.

Our readers have doubtless noticed the numerous discussions by the scientists and hygienists as to the relative value of the various baking powders. A careful sifting of the evidence leaves no doubt as to the superiority of the Royal Baking Powder in purity, wholesomeness and strength, from a scientific standpoint An opinion, however, that will have perhaps greater influence with our practical housekeepers, is that given by Marion Harland, the well known and popular writer, upon matters pertaining to science of domestic economy, of housekeeping, and of home cooking. In a letter published in the Ladies Home Journal, this writer says:

"I regard the Royal Baking Powder as the best manufactured and in the market, so far as I have any experience in the use of such compounds. Since the introduction of it into my kitchen, I have used no other in making biscuits, cakes, etc., and have entirely discarded for such purposes the homemade combination of one-third soda, two-thirds cream of tartar.

"Every box has been in perfect condition when it came into my hands, and the contents have given complete satisfaction. It is an act of simple justice, and also a pleasure, to recommend it unqualifiedly to American housewives. MARION HARLAND."
